

Reward charts, coupons and boxes

Useful tips

Reward charts/ stickers

- Can be individualised to match the child's preferences and interests
- The number of stickers required can be agreed/ adapted to fill the chart making it easier for the child to achieve
- Charts can be specifically to target and celebrate certain behaviours or can be a more generalised system for collecting stickers for a range of positive behaviours and acts

Reward coupons

- Can be chosen by the child when they have achieved their set goal of stickers or marbles in a jar or simply as an instant reward for doing something well
- A selection of coupons from which to choose is important and they must be motivating to the child
- The child could keep their chosen coupon in a reward pocket or photo frame (Displayed within the room at nursery or at home)

WITH MORE

This couples it good for

DINNER OF YOUR

CHOICE

Reward boxes

- Follows a similar idea to the coupons but allows the child to make an instant choice from a range of tangible rewards such as toys to play with contained in their very own personalised box
- Include the child in helping to set up the box and including the items that they want to earn time playing with
- Refresh the contents at regular intervals to maintain interest and motivation

Links to EYFS: Communication & Language, Personal Social & Emotional Development

SEND Code of Practice: Communication & Interaction, Cognition & Learning, Social Emotional & Mental Health

All these strategies are ways to celebrate positive and 'desired' behaviours

All these strategies can be used effectively at school, nursery and at home

Remember...

The child needs to know specifically what they have done to receive the reward/ sticker.

The reward needs to be given at the time the child is praised or has shown the desired behaviourfeedback needs to be immediate to be effective